READING STRATEGY

Look at the layout, the title and the pictures of the text in order to make some predictions about it.

The Future of Movies

What will movies and movie theaters be like in the future? Here are our answers to your predictions!

- 1 Ever since the release of the extremely popular Avatar in 2009, 3D movies have become more and more common. In 2011, there were more than 60 3D movies released, and producers are planning many more for the next few years. In fact, some directors, such as James Cameron and Steven Spielberg, are re-releasing 3D versions of some of their best known old movies, too. For example, you can now see classics like Titanic, Indiana Jones and Top Gun in 3D. The famous director Martin Scorsese released his very first 3D movie in 2011 – the film was called Hugo, and it won 5 Academy Awards. Today, 3D movies are so popular that many people even have special 3D televisions so they can enjoy these special effects at home as well as at the movie theater.
- 2 There are already interactive TV shows on the internet. You can choose what happens, help to write the dialogue and plot and even appear in a show! Will movies ever be interactive? Who knows!

- 3 Will computer-generated images of actors replace human actors? Computer programmers can create action scenes using digital actors – they are so realistic that audiences don't realize they aren't human. This new technology is very expensive, so movie-makers have decided that they are only going to use it to film dangerous stunts and to re-film some scenes. They are not going to stop using real actors, so we'll definitely have human actors for many more years!
- 4 Companies have already tried extra special effects inside the movie theater, such as smells and moving chairs, without much success. People are more interested in realistic special effects on screen. Producers are investing a lot of money to create better special effects. For this reason, the special effects are going to get more exciting and realistic – but movie theaters themselves probably won't change much.
- 5 Since the first movie in 1895, people have loved cinema. Audiences everywhere enjoy good stories and they want entertainment. Movie technology will change and perhaps we'll all watch hologram movies in a few years. But one thing is certain, people definitely won't stop watching movies!
