THIRD CONDITIONAL

The third conditional is used to express the past consequence of an unrealistic action or situation in the past.

Ex:

If he had studied harder, he would have passed the exam.

- The first action (studying hard) didn't happen. But in the case that he happened, the consequence was passing the exam.

We often use the third conditional to express regrets – describing things we are sorry happened or didn't happen.

Ex.

If there hadn't been so much traffic we wouldn't have missed our flight.

To make a sentence in the third conditional, we use,

If + past perfect, would/wouldn't have + past participle.

Examples:

- If you had told me about the meeting, I would have come.
- If you had told me about the meeting, I wouldn't have missed it.

1. If you hadn't been (not / be) late, we wouldn't have missed (not / miss) the bus.
2. If she had studied (study), she would have passed (pass) the exam.
3. If we had arrived (arrive) earlier, we would have seen (see) John.
4. If they had gone (go) to bed early, they wouldn't have woken (not / wake) up late.
5. If he had become (become) a musician, he would have recorded (record) a CD.
6. If she had gone (go) to art school, she would have become (become) a painter.

MIXED CONDITIONALS (SECOND AND THIRD CONDITIONAL)

It's possible to combine the second and the third conditionals. There are two ways of doing that.

Describe the present consequence of a past situation.

If + past simple, would have + past participle.

Ex:
If I were adventurous, I'd have gone backpacking after university.

Describe the past consequence of a present situation.

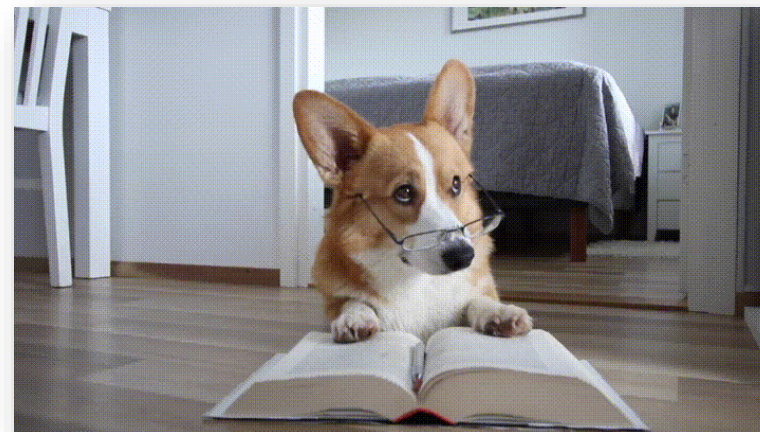

If + past perfect, would + verb.

Ex:
If we hadn't missed the flight, we'd be in our hotel by now.

Wishes and Regrets

While eating at a restaurant is an enjoyable and convenient occasional treat, most individuals and families prepare their meals at home. To make breakfast, lunch, and dinner daily, these people must have the required food and ingredients on hand and ready to go; food and ingredients are typically purchased from a grocery store, or an establishment that distributes food, drinks, household products, and other items that are used by the typical consumer.

Produce, or the term used to describe fresh fruit and vegetables, is commonly purchased by grocery store shoppers. In terms of fruit, most grocery stores offer bananas, apples, oranges, and more; other grocery stores with larger produce selections might offer the listed fruits in addition to less common fruit, including mangoes, honeydews, starfruits, coconuts, and others.

Depending on the grocery store, customers can purchase fruit in a few different ways. Some stores will charge a set amount per pound of fruit and will weigh customers' fruit purchases and bill them accordingly; other stores will charge customers for each piece of fruit they buy, or for bundles of fruit (a bunch of bananas, a bag of apples, etc.); other stores yet will simply charge by the container.

Vegetables are also sold at many grocery stores and are purchased similarly to the way that fruit are. Grocery stores typically stock more vegetables than fruit at any given time, as vegetables remain fresh longer than fruits do, generally speaking.

It'd take quite a while to list everything else that today's massive grocery stores sell, but most customers take the opportunity to shop for staples, or food that play a prominent role in the average diet, at the establishments. Staples include pasta, rice, flour, etc. All the listed staples are available in prepackaged containers but can be purchased "fresh" in some grocery stores, where employees will measure and weigh fresh products and then provide them to customers.
