History on the Streets

On a street, there is often a variety of houses from very different periods of history.

1

The Victorian era was the start of industrial Britain, and industry and jobs were in the cities. There are millions of terraced houses in Britain from that era. They're popular because they often have big rooms with large windows. There's a fireplace in each room because, in the 1850s, there wasn't any electric or gas heating. In a 'two-up-two-down' house, there were two bedrooms upstairs and a kitchen and living room downstairs. The toilet was outside. Victorian terraces have neighbors on both sides.

Semi-detached houses have neighbors on one side only. They are a popular type of home in England,

Australia and Canada. A 1950s semi usually has a kitchen and a large living room and dining room downstairs. Upstairs, there are two or three bedrooms and a bathroom with a toilet and bath. There were cars on the roads in the 1950s, so these houses usually have a garage, too.

3

In the 1980s, there were more young people who weren't married and didn't live with their parents. Their jobs were stressful, it wasn't an easy life, so they didn't want a garden to work on during the weekend. As a consequence, apartments were popular. In these apartments, there are normally one or two bedrooms, a living room, a bathroom and a kitchen. There isn't a garden or a balcony, but in the 1980s everyone had a car, so there's usually a garage.
