2ND CONDITIONAL IMPROBABLE TO IMPOSSIBLE

The Second Conditional is used to hypothesize about situations that we feel are improbable or even impossible.

We use this particular conditional a lot when we dream about having something that we don't actually have, or being someone or something that we are not.

It can vary in use from something that we feel is unlikely all the way to something that we feel is practically impossible.

STRUCTURE & EXAMPLES

Structure: If + Past, Subject + would/could/might + Infinitive (-to)

Remember, we can change the order and put the result clause first. The only difference is that the comma is no longer needed. We use 'would' when we feel certain about the result, 'could' when we think it's a possible result, and 'might' when we think it's a probable result

- If I had more time, I would study Japanese. (certain)
- If they were here, they could help us move the furniture. (possible)
- She might be angry too if she knew what happened. (probable)
- What would you do if you won the lottery? (general for questions)
- If they weren't so messy, it wouldn't be a problem
- Everyone would be happy if there were no taxes to pay

BEING RICH IS A GOOD THING?

Being rich would be great! Wouldn't it? "If I inherited a million dollars, I'd ..." is something we all like to dream, but many rich people nowadays disagree that it's good to inherit a fortune. Many millionaires are choosing not to leave their fortune to their children when they die. They feel it is the only way to ensure their children will have a happy life.

"If you didn't have to earn your own money, you would grow up lazy and selfish. It is much better to be independent and find a job you enjoy", says Emma Hambleton, a rich businesswoman who has decided her children won't inherit her millions.

These worried parents are probably thinking of the tragic lives of some super-rich children. Christina Onassis had four unhappy marriages before she died aged 38. The son of the Fiat car chief, Edoardo Agnelli, got into trouble with the police and died aged 46.

However, it is untrue that all children with super-rich parents have unhappy lives. For example, Holly Branson, the daughter of the Virgin tycoon Richard Branson, is a qualified medical doctor and a charity worker, Stella McCartney, daughter of the Beatle Sir Paul, is a top fashion designer.

Perhaps Bill Gates of Microsoft has the best idea. He has already given away large amounts of money to medical charities, and he intends to leave them even more money when he dies. His children will only inherit a very small part of his billions. That way they will have enough to buy a comfortable home and pay medical bills, but not so much that they will get bored.
