Doug Scott: Good night, ladies and gentlemen. On tonight's show, we talk to two of America's gifted children about their daily routines. Aisha Smith is 11. Just like other American 11-year-olds, Aisha usually gets up at seven o'clock. She starts school at nine o'clock and she's never late. Aisha's very intelligent! In her free time, she designs computer games. She also speaks six languages, plays the cello and paints beautiful pictures. And she has time to meet her friends. Hi, Aisha!

CAMERA 3

Aisha Smith: Hello, Doug! Thanks for your invitation!

(Everybody claps.)

Doug Scott: Rick Moore is 11, and he's also very intelligent. He plays the piano and he sometimes writes music, too – his ambition is to be a top composer. He always gets up very early to play the piano, around five thirty in the morning. He wants to play the piano all day, but he hardly ever does that because he goes to school and he has homework – he always does his homework. He often goes to bed at eleven thirty. Hello, Rick!

CAMERA 2

Rick Moore: Hi, Doug! I'm a little nervous, but very happy to be here.

(Everybody claps.)
